The Managed Care Information Center – “Providing Essential Management Information to Healthcare Executives”

This appears to be a well organized site, and should prove very useful, but has a few broken links and appears to need some updates, making navigation less smooth than it appears it was designed to be in 2000. There is evidence that the site is still active, but I moved on fairly quickly to the “links” page to find more “synonymous sites.”

A brief description of the company behind the site is found on one of the “about us” pages: “Located in Manasquan, N.J., The Managed Care Information Center (MCIC) was formed to serve as a clearinghouse for healthcare executives' managed care information needs by publishing newsletters, advisories, guides, manuals, special reports and books. MCIC created ManagedCareMarketplace.com in response to executives' requests for a single directory covering all types of managed care vendors and service providers.”

This site features a lot of advertising – and a variety of information including links to their affiliates – which is where this reviewer discovered the next web site:
